Roger Goebel, Eleanor Fox, George Bermann, Jeffery Atik, Frank Emmert : Cases and Materials on European Union Law (American Casebook Series) before purchasing it in order to gage whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised Cases and Materials on European Union Law (American Casebook Series):

I am absolutely certain that this fascinating material could have been presented in a much less confusing and much more accessible manner. The authors seem as though they do not speak English as a first language and as such, their usage of certain words throughout the work consistently lead to confusion as American students do not understand how to interpret certain very crucial sentences. They consistently attempt to analogize EU law to various aspects of American Constitutional Law, which in theory can yield a really wonderful comparative analysis that leads to a deeper understanding of the foreign law being studied, but here such comparative analysis is incredibly cursory (sometimes outright incorrect in its broad sweeping generalizations) and adds little to the text. The material is presented in such a disorganized and unstructured manner that you will find several paragraphs in each chapter that are devoted to rote repetition. And by repetition, I mean written at least five times in the book. Why ask your students to spend so much money on a book, that no doubt has an elevated price due to the increased number of pages attributable to this very consistent and wholly unnecessary repetition? Thank goodness I have a wonderful professor, because this book is certainly not for studying on your own.

This classic casebook presents the governance and judicial structure of the European Union, together with its major substantive law fields of concern to students and practitioners, all as updated by the 2009 Treaty of Lisbon. Part I presents the history, institutional structure, principal Court constitutional doctrines, and its basic legal system. Teachers may choose among the other five parts to tailor their courses to their interests. Part II presents leading Court precedents and legislation intended to achieve the common market, later renamed the internal market. Part III comprehensively covers EU competition law and policy, of great concern to practitioners. The European Unions external relations and trade policy is the subject of Part IV, while Part V presents the impact of free movement of capital and EU banking regulation, and the Monetary Union. Finally, Part VI presents several key policy areas: the harmonization of employment law, anti-discrimination rules, environmental protection, and civil and commercial litigation rules.
